DOWN WITH HER MAJESTY

SUNNY DAY
CHUCK DOWNFIELD

The saga surrounding manager Melanie Shayer and Her Majesty's Royal Army continued this week with a dramatic loss to twin and rival Dawn Burney, manager of A New Dawn. After Burney's comments in the press last week, fans expected a violent and physical game between the two teams, but the Chivalrous Knights looked unwilling to put up a fight, losing by nearly 40 points. Army star players Joe Burrow and Justin Jefferson refused to play in protest of the treatment of minority creatures in the kingdom. Anti-monarchy sentiment was so strong among the team, Shayer was unable to find a kicker to start the matchup. Burney struck a victorious tone in her post-game interview, saying, "Today we showed the league what the power of love and friendship and harmony can do... I hope Melanie's players got the message that they will be accepted and celebrated for who they are if they choose to join A New Dawn." Shayer skipped her media availability and has not commented publicly since the loss.

THE FELLOWSHIP FALLS APART

Lackluster performances from multiple players led to an embarrassing loss for Coren Hucke's Fellowship of the Football this week. Mallory DeSantiago's Power Pwincesses dominated all phases of the game, though the victory may feel short-lived. Both teams suffered injuries to major players this week. Pwincesses WR Terry McLaurin heroically caught the winning pass as he suffered a leg injury that will sideline him for the rest of the season, and QB Jalen Hurts won't return this year either. Fellowship WR Davante Adams was pierced by three Uruk-hai arrows in an attempt to protect his teammates from marauders in the stadium. Reporters asked Hucke if the Fellowship has failed, but he responded, "Not if we hold true to each other." Hucke plans to continue quoting the Lord of the Rings trilogy until he dies or sells the team.

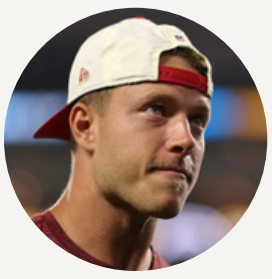

As Davante always says, "One does not simply think outside the bun."

Featured Matchup: Jasmine's Fav @ Down Under Influencers

Alan Tribble may not be the Tribble with the best win-loss record, and he may not be the best-looking or smartest of the Tribble clan, but he has the best chance to take down league-leader Aaron DeSantiago and his Down Under Influencers this week. "We're planning to play copyrighted music from our sideline to ruin the Influencer's clips," said Tribble. DeSantiago just stood at the podium staring at the camera, pants around his ankles, head cocked to the side like a confused puppy.

Noteworthies

Baller of the Week: RB Christian McCaffrey (DUI), 30.7pts

The running back tandem down under is looking unstoppable lately, and this week it was McCaffrey's turn to take the lead. "It's been great collabing with Kenneth," he told a sideline reporter. "We just both really push each other to improve and always perform like the camera is on." Both McCaffrey and Walker are in talks to appear on The Traitors in the next offseason.

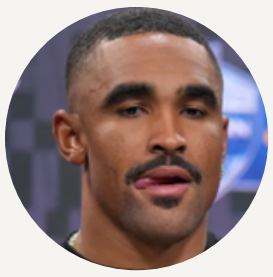

Walloping of the Week: A New Dawn defeats Her Majesty's Royal Army

A New Dawn's players approached this matchup with the righteous conviction of a Union general bellowing "glory, glory, hallelujah." It was like Sherman's March to the Sea out there. Shayer's team is surely licking their wounds as they prepare to host Hospital Ward next week. Commissioner Tribble, manager of the Ward, has not chosen a favorite twin so far.

Nailbiter of the Week: Power Pwincesses defeat Fellowship of the Football

Experts before the game expected Hucke's team to win by 35 points, but McLaurin's heroic catch sent both of these teams to 3-3. Pwincesses RB Cam Skattebo put up 0 points in the win. DeSantiago explained, "He's the sowt of pwayew whose impact doesn't weawwy show up on the scoweboawd." Skattebo's impact is mowe wike wunning into a bwick waww.

Injury News of the Week: Jalen Hurts (that's the whole headline, get it?)

Concerned fans are asking how Power Pwincesses QB Jalen Hurts was allowed to play a full game after medical staff discovered a little guy in his blood stream. "I've never seen anything like it," said Dr. Doctor Willard Bliss. "Normally there's just blood in there but Jalen has a little guy running around." Hurts will be sidelined indefinitely until the little guy goes away.

Benchwarmer of the Week: QB Trevor Lawrence (FotF), 27.34 pts

The Fellowship might have won if Lawrence had been on the field, but he was on the bench scoring 27.34 points against himself in a game of "Highest Number." Good one, Trevor!
