ISSUE 43

DESANTIAGO'S TEAM IS ALIVE

SUNNY DAY
CHUCK DOWNFIELD

Aaron DeSantiago's Down Under Influencers continue to light up the league, winning their last six games in a row and sitting at first place in the standings. Much of the team's success can be attributed to their dynamic running back duo, but DeSantiago has been doing everything he can to improve the roster beyond his current star players. A hulking 7-foot lineman with simply "Monster" printed on his green jersey has been winning battles in the trenches for this team ever since he appeared on the team a few weeks ago. The Monster's origin is unclear, but some have pointed out that his arrival coincided with DeSantiago's brief trip to Transylvania earlier this year. DeSantiago has described the trip as "settling an estate, going on a few hay rides, putting on the ritz, things of that nature."

SUBGENRE SCRIMMAGE

Ashton Djenty manager Matt Tribble had pointed words for his next opponent this week. "The Power Metal Pwincesses may have speed, but they lack the oomph, technicality, and progressiveness to be as interesting as Djent." Manager Mallory DeSantiago was quick to respond on social media, saying, "All that terrible music must have given Matt brain damage, because he didn't realize 'Metal' is not in my team name." The genwe gwudge wiww come to a head on the footbaww fiewd.

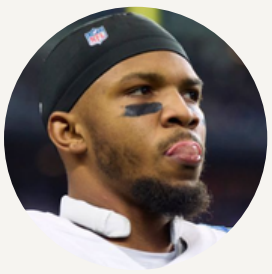

Aaron DeSantiago (pictured, right) has yet to face his wife, Mallory DeSantiago (not pictured). That is, he hasn't faced her in a football game. And also he hasn't faced her, like, in the eyes. Because he's short.

Featured Matchup: Lawn Darts™ @ A New Dawn

The ASFL's second-longest winning streak belongs to A New Dawn, but this week her husband's team Lawn Darts™ will attempt to end it. "Dawn has had enough success, it's time she went back to losing constantly," said Kris. Co-owner Lawrence Barnett Jr. was also excited for the matchup, reasoning that Dawn's recent political stands could draw more attention to his own pet issue– the ASFL's monopoly on sports entertainment. Fans have yet to figure out what his whole deal is.

Noteworthies

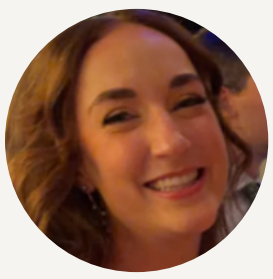

Baller of the Week: RB Tony Pollard (FotF), 36.5 pts

Fellowship RB Tony Pollard had the game of his life this week, scoring three touchdowns and prompting confused remarks of, "wait, who?" from across the league. Reporters after the game asked the relatively unknown player to introduce himself. Pollard replied, "I'm Tony, I'm a Taurus, I like a nice cold sangria in the summer and deep talks under the stars."

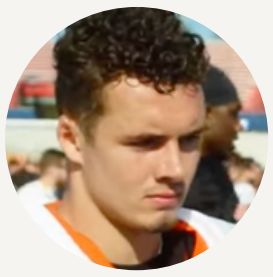

Walloping of the Week: Hospital Ward defeats Her Majesty's Royal Army

Have you ever seen a grown man pick up a hospital gurney and swing it like a baseball bat, striking his opponent harder than any WWE chair ever has? That was the scene as Daniel Tribble's Hospital Ward served up a major beating in Her Majesty's realm. Tribble's new team motto, painted over the tunnel, is "Ward Will Win (WWW)."

Nailbiter of the Week: A New Dawn defeats Fellowship of the Football

Managers across the league had a jolly good laugh watching Coren Hucke's Fellowship of the Football lose in the closing minutes against A New Dawn. "It's okay and even morally right to laugh at Coren's misfortune, because he's a good sport and he can take it," Burney said after the win. But they don't know what they just awoke. They'll know soon enough. They'll all know.

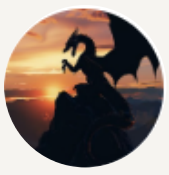

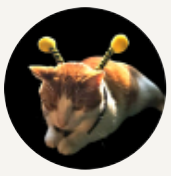

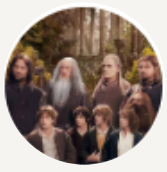

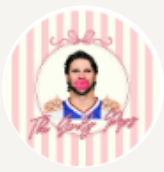

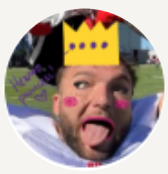

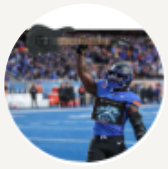

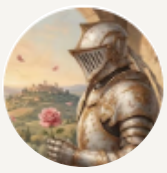

Injury News of the Week: WR Ladd McConkey (DUI) a hypochondriac

After Influencer WR Ladd McConkey reported his third different injury of the year, team medical staff have quietly begun to worry that the problem may be more mental than physical. "It's unclear whether he invents injuries out of a need for attention or if he has a genuine delusion that the injuries are real," said one team doctor, granted anonymity for fear of reprisal.

Benchwarmer of the Week: QB Bo Nix (JENT), 26.2 pts

Watching from the bench as teammate Patrick Mahomes flailed, Nix found himself wishing one of them was good at football. At least he scored 26.2 points in Wordscapes. Go Bo!
