BEHEMOTH BETH BEATEN

SUNNY DAY CHUCK DOWNFIELD

The last unbeaten team in the ASFL, Beth Tribble's Max the Manx, lost in dramatic fashion this week to Aaron De-Santiago's Down Under Influencers. Early in the game, the Influencers looked to be in trouble when starting QB Marcus Mariota left the game with a knee injury. But the pendulum swung the other way when Max the Manx's own Lamar Jackson followed him off the field with an ankle injury of his own. The ASFL's rules don't allow mid-game substitutions for injuries, so both teams were left to duke it out with only their remaining players (backups QBs Sam Darnold and Kyler Murray looked at each other wistfully from opposite sidelines). In the end, it was Influencer RB Kenneth Walker III who led the way to victory. "Walker got some great clips, Mariota is all set to do a special co-working physical therapy stream live from the hospital, and Beth finally lost a game, so it was a really successful weekend," said DeSantiago after the game. At 3-1, Tribble still leads the standings, but the loss was a huge moral victory for other managers to learn that she is, in fact, mortal like the rest of us.

HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL MESS

Reports from the kingdom of Her Majesty have continued to worsen as the Chivalrous Knights lost their third straight game. Team members live in fear of retribution from the anonymous despot. Despite the terror in the streets, there are whispers of a rebellious opposition forming against Her Majesty, with some openly questioning whether she even exists. Rival manager Dawn Burney posted on X about the unrest, saying, "I feel bad for the people stuck in that realm, because they don't even know how much they've been lied to about 'Her Majesty'." Shayer says she's focused on returning the team to success, and has no time for "rumors from jealous cosplayers."

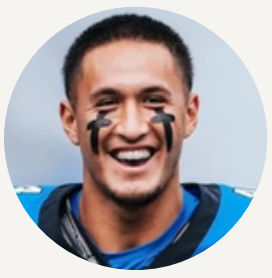

This is what it looks like when everything in the realm is going just fine, no really, stop asking.

Featured Matchup: Power Pwincesses 👸 @ Her Majesty's Royal Army

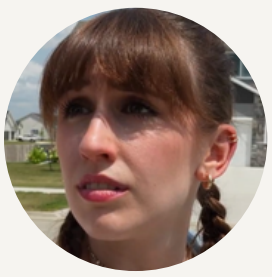

Experts expect the contest between Mallory DeSantiago's Power Pwincesses and Melanie Shayer's Chivalrous Knights of Her Majesty's Royal Army to be a lopsided one, though opinions are mixed regarding which way it will lop. The statistical truth is every week's most lopsided game so far has featured one of these teams as the winner or loser. "I hope your article has a fun zinger in it instead of boring statistical factoids," said Shayer when interviewed. Better luck next time.

Noteworthies

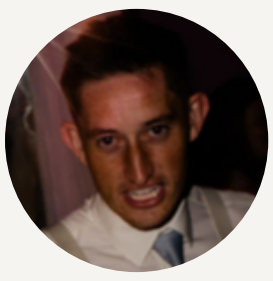

Baller of the Week: WR Tetairoa McMillan (GPOP), 45.2 pts

Tetairoa McMillan was a pink blur in the pink dome this week, running up and down the field as he racked up 45 points against A New Dawn. After snapping out of his flow state after the game, McMillan was surprised to learn his team had still lost by 5 points. "I hate to point fingers," he said as he pointed his finger (with acrylic nail), "but let's just say this loss wasn't on me."

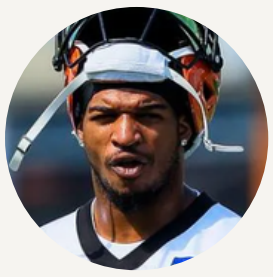

Walloping of the Week: Jasmine's Fav defeats Power Pwincesses

In Week 1, Mallory DeSantiago's Power Pwincesses were on the wrong end of Beth Tribble's team's 82-point walloping. In Week 4, the widest loss margin was also the Pwincesses, this time losing to Alan Tribble's team by 37 points. DeSantiago was livid after the game, saying, "Beth and Alan annoy me so much, I can only imagine how annoying their child would be."

Nailbiter of the Week: Buzzin' Buzzers defeat Hospital Ward

It came down to the buzzer this week for the Buzzin' Buzzers, but the busters were able to buzz their way to a second consecutive win. The win was a result of a crucial coaching mistake by Hospital Ward's Daniel Tribble, who mismanaged his timeouts at the end of the game when he was momentarily distracted thinking about his Master's degree homework.

Injury News of the Week: WR Ja'Marr Chase (PPs) loses protective tiara

Last week, the Power Pwincesses' infamous tiara helmets caused an injury to Girly Pops backup QB Baker Mayfield. This week, a malfunctioning tiara popped off in the middle of play, leaving WR Ja'Marr Chase vulnerable. "He bonked his head on the gwound pwetty hawd," said manager Mallory DeSantiago, "but it's a minow injuwy." Chase's status is questionabwe.

Benchwarmer of the Week: RB Kyle Monangai (DEB), 28.0 pts

While Omarion Hampton flopped around on the field, Kyle Monangai was on the sideline scoring a measly 28 points on his handheld Yahtzee game machine. Stick to football, Kyle!
